Choosing a Credit Counselling Agency

Saint John, NB – We have all heard the ads offering to reduce your credit payments and interest, it all sounds so enticing but what can a consumer do to ensure they are receiving quality service from an accredited Credit Counselling Agency?

“When you consider seeking advice for handling your debt you have to be sure that you receive counselling from an agency that is accredited and there to help the consumer with their financial goals,” says John Eisner, President of Credit Counselling Services of Atlantic Canada (CCSAC). “An accredited Credit Counselling Agency will offer you more than just a repayment plan; they will focus on budgeting, financial well-being and education.”

CCSAC offers consumers across Atlantic Canada face-to-face counselling, telephone counselling and educational seminars; we have offices throughout Atlantic Canada. It is of grave concern to Mr. Eisner when he hears ads from companies that offer great reductions in interest and lower payments. “Each consumer we see faces a different financial situation,” outlines Mr. Eisner, “for advertisements to make promises before you sit down and listen to the consumer’s situation is unsettling.”

CCSAC’s newsletter for July/August gives consumers insights into what to look for when seeking help from a Credit Counselling agency:
